It took me to a website selling it and there was a link for the manual. In case you can't find the link, if you look at the back there's a black rectangle that has two push buttons. On the left REC and on the right MSet. The directions state to hold the set button down for 5 seconds until the hands start to move. Continue to press until correct time is displayed. If you press the left REC button instead it tells the clock to search for a signal. It states to be careful to not have it near any electronics that could interfere with the signal. Mine set easily so you may have interference i.e. mountains etc or you may have gotten a misfunctioning clock. I would try this first before giving it up, however. see less I looked up the model and found the directions. I searched for Lorell radio controlled clock model number LLR60994 instructions. It takes up to 24 hours or so to correct itself so be patient. Put the batteries in and leave it to get in sync. Do not manually manipulate because it will take that much longer to get in sync. JP · February 10, 2014 0 of 1 found this helpful. Do you? | Report abuse You cannot set it manually. You put in the batteries in and select the time zone and it sets itself. sling shot · February 9, 2014 0 of 2 found this helpful. Do you? | Report abuse J. Spellman, I don't think you can set it manually. If you can't receive the signal from Boulder, then it seems that the clock is pretty much useless. By the way, it's a great clock and we enjoy it! M. Robertson · February 9, 2014 0 of 2 found this helpful. Do you? | Report abuse I left it up for a few days and still couldn't get a signal in my electronic filled room. I had to set it manually. The instruction to set it manually is in the instruction sheet. See if you can locate it. I would have to find mine to give you the answer as well.UPDATE: I found the instruction. Right below the battery compartment, there are 2 pin holes and 2 switches. The right hand side hole is the Manual Set Button. Hold it for 5 seconds and the hands start to move. Continue to press the button until it get to the correct time and then let go. K. C. · February 9, 2014 1 of 1 found this helpful. Do you? | Report abuse I have forgotten what we did, but the excellent directions were included. As far as I can recall. we installed the batteries and tried to place it facing sort of west, if possible, toward where its signal comes from. After 24 hours. it set itself. Great clock! B. Allison B. Allison · February 9, 2014 0 of 2 found this helpful. Do you? | Report abuse If you need to set the time of day on a radio controlled clock, it is broken. These types of clocks synchronize themselves via radio signals received from the United States National Institute of Standards and Technology. You should only be able to change the time zone and turn daylight savings time ON/OFF. If you wish set the clock a bit fast or slow, you need to remove the three bezel screws holding the glass in place and manually rotate the hands to the desired time offset. Bill D. · February 9, 2014 0 of 2 found this helpful. Do you? | Report abuse I do not think you can. Within a few hours it resets itself. For example, after replacing the battery, it may be a while before the time is corrected. It has always corrected by the next morning after evening replacement.
